Computer can never be your teacher or your book. You have to read to know more. A computer will only give as much information as is fed into it. It doesn't help in developing your critical or analytical skills. You need a book to know more, go beyond the limited information given by it. It doesn't help in developing your critical or analytical skills.

A book is your own. There is a unique delight in owning it. You can look at the pictures again and again, read your favourite poems and stories again and again. They help when you are feeling lonely, they take you everywhere while you sit in an armchair. They evoke personal memories. Can a computer do that? You go and sit before a computer? How many computers do you have in your house to cater to everyone's need? You may have to depend on so much electricity, need of other family members. But books? You do not need anyone's permission to read them. You do not have to share them also.

Scientists and doctors have been warning people against sitting before a computer for long hours. They affect posture, eyesight and general health. You can sit anywhere, e.g., in the park and read even lying down.

Above all, computers are costly proposition. Books are cheaper and within everyone's reach. Every school in India cannot afford computers or give them. Books are the only means to do so. Whatever we might say in praise of computers they can never replace a book.
